To learn Photoshop, the first thing you'll want to know is how to use the Brush tools. Adobe Photoshop will ask you to use the Brush tool when it's needed, but many beginners would rather skip that step and go directly to the advanced editing tools. Using the Brush The Brush tool allows you to paint directly over the layers in your image to add various adjustments such as blur and sharpening. If you want to add a layer over an existing layer, simply choose Layer > New, and then select Layer from the Brush category. Once you click your mouse, the option to create a new layer appears. Some images may require a few clicks to the right to open the Brush tools. The Brush tools in Photoshop are not as intuitive as they appear on other programs, such as Paint Shop Pro, where it's a one-click process to start painting over the image. Use the Options bar Before you start adding fine detail with the brush, it's best to make sure the size of your brush tip matches the size of the image. When you paint directly on the image, you will only have a small view of the image that is around the size of the Brush tool. Use the Options bar to change your brush size and see the size of the Brush tooltip. In the Brush panel, you can adjust the size of the brush. You will usually change the size to the size of the brush tip, but if you change the size to a size larger than that of the brush tip, you will change the size of the Brush tool to be larger than the size of the brush tip. You can adjust the size of the brush tip by clicking and dragging on the Options bar. You will see a green tip where you can drag. Drag to the right, and you will see a larger brush tip. Drag to the left and you will see a smaller brush tip. You can adjust the size of your brush tip by clicking and dragging the tip in the Options bar. You can also change the amount of roundness or thickness of the brush tip by clicking in the Options bar. If you click-and-hold, you will see the brush tip fade from green to gray (not something you want to use on a real photo). This indicates that the brush is no longer a round brush. Click the green area again and you'll see the brush tip return to its original size and shape. Changing the size of the brush tip is not Immunological approaches to the treatment of prostate cancer. Treatment of prostate cancer with androgen deprivation alone is not curative for many patients. Thus, second-line therapies such as chemotherapy and radiation therapy are being used to increase survival in men with relapsed or recurrent disease. Recent advances in the treatment of prostate cancer with immunotherapy include the use of active specific immunotherapy, passive immunotherapy, and immune modulation. These therapies are each distinct in terms of the target of the antibody (i.e. tumor cells versus cells of the immune system) and the mechanism by which they function. Antibodies targeting prostate-specific membrane antigen (PSMA) are quite effective in enhancing cellular immune responses and are currently being tested in clinical trials. A number of monoclonal antibodies against heat shock proteins have shown preclinical evidence of therapeutic potential. Monoclonal antibodies against human leukocyte antigen (HLA) molecules are being tested in combination with radiotherapy and have shown promise in enhancing the efficacy of radiation therapy. Finally, cytokines that regulate immune responses may be useful as adjuvants to enhance the effectiveness of cancer vaccines. The therapeutic potential of these immunotherapy approaches for prostate cancer is discussed, and the information obtained from clinical trials is reviewed.

Wednesday, September 25, 2008 It was just a short but sweet stay in Scotland. On Friday, we drove to our new home in Glasgow, Scotland. Home sweet home. My boss and I stayed with my in-laws, which was nice. It was great to meet up with my family after so long. I didn't get any good pictures of our new home, but I did make a couple of videos.

Saturday, September 14, 2008 About 3 weeks ago I began a new job as a nutritionist. It's pretty exciting and challenging to be a nutritionist. I am fortunate to have a manager who is just as passionate about the dietary guidelines and food pyramid as I am. I love being a part of something. This is a project of ours, and it will be exciting to see the results.

We are working to increase awareness of health by changing the food pyramid to make it more like a food wheel. We are creating a new graphic and a video to use during education sessions on the module. We started working on it a few months ago, so we are excited to finally be sending something in to the Canadian Society of Exercise Physiologists. We changed our look recently. I really like the new look
