I'm using ASP.NET Identity 1.1 with SQL Server 2008 as my backend. When someone uses Windows Authentication, I need to impersonate their user. Now, I'm wondering if I can install something to somehow make the system impersonate their user instead of me. I'm not sure exactly what would be best to do this... A: You can impersonate the Windows Authentication request through a PageFilterAttribute, something like this: using (var impersonationContext = HttpContext.Current.User.Identity as WindowsIdentity) { //Do Stuff } Note, that when the ASP.NET request pipeline is used by a URL like it is the role of the application pool that is used. If the ASP.NET request pipeline is used by a URL like it is the role of the application pool that is used. One way to handle both cases, would be the following: public class ImpersonateWindowsAttribute : ActionFilterAttribute { private string _tokenType; public ImpersonateWindowsAttribute(string tokenType) { _tokenType = tokenType; } public override void OnActionExecuting(ActionExecutingContext filterContext) { if (filterContext == null) { throw new ArgumentNullException("filterContext"); } if (!HttpContext.Current.IsRequestBeingRedirected()) { WindowsIdentity currentIdentity = HttpContext.Current.User.Identity as WindowsIdentity; if (currentIdentity != null) e79caf774b
