September 7, 2009 This Tuesday, I am at a mall near my place, buying birthday presents. I leave the mall, walk home and send an email. I forget that I still have my cell phone in my pocket. I call the nearest mall and find out that they are closed. After hanging up the phone, I call the store I am in and they tell me that they are closed. I inform them that it's a mall and they answer, "we have a mall near here." I tell them the mall that has closed. The guy on the phone tells me to go to the other mall that is about 2 kilometers away, where they have a mall that is just closed. I walk to the next place, a small grocery store, and call them. They close the next mall. I go to a drugstore. The guy in the call center tells me to go to a mall on the other side of the mountain. I do and then an hour or more later I return to my original mall, where all the stores are closed and I've been on the phone all that time. I write out the address and phone number of the bank and I have an hour to make a long trek to where I need to go. I get lost three or four times. I finally make it there, but, it's very late. I wait at the mailbox. The guy at the bank opens the mailbox. I call my grandma. I wait in the lobby and call my mom and tell her that the bank is closed. She tells me to wait for the guy in the night watchman and he will open the box. I call her again and tell her that the box has been opened. She tells me to

is a serialized parody of a growing trend of light novel series that are published and/or "adapted" into anime. The setting is a northern America built on the ruins of a "Reconstruction Era" a few years after "The Great War" that left the world in ashes. The story follows the 4 main characters, separated by Time, as they unravel the reasons to exist of a newly shaped society as well as their own past. This is the prologue chapter for the series. As the name plainly suggested, this is the first chapter of the 1st anime season for Hitori no Shounen. Chapter 1: New setting A huge barn of a building was slowly being put together using the labor of the survivors. This time around, though, it wasn't a structure constructed in a matter of days, but rather weeks, the survivors had to work tirelessly through the new morning, and not just any morning, but the very last morning before snow of the winter-season. With the sight of a newly grown snowstorm, Nate set out to open a small side door towards the side of a huge barn that was unknown by any other survivors. "Where's he even going?" One of the laborers mumbled to himself, turning his body to see where Nate had been going with his task. Out of nowhere, a note of a crescendo of a horn cut through the air. "Shit!" The entire group of people surrounding the barn let out a sigh of annoyance, unanimously looking at the worker that could see through Nate's window. As a group of people attempted to get more workers, a big and white van, covered in great smears of soot and sand, was seen flying towards them, going as fast as it could, wobbling a bit along the way. "It's the reconstruction squad from the government!" A worker yelled out, trying to get the attention of his loved ones. A group of women and a group of men (once there was a male) all independently ran towards the van, eager to speak with the driver of the van. "Okay okay, everybody ready!" A man yelled at the group of workers. The group of workers parted, letting the rest lead the way, in a countdown at 5. 5!...4!...3...2...1! Nate opened his side door, letting snow in and out at all times, it would be someone's job to
