lateral excursion Ibatic lateral excursion is a concept in kinematics that applies to those subclasses of marine animals with complete motility; those animals whose motion is basically provided by internal hydrostatic pressure. It is widely believed that in 2008, a new research article produced evidence of a theoretical method to explain horizontal movement in a new theoretical article. Almost a decade later, the theory is still hotly debated; primarily due to the fact that the force generating mechanism in marine eel-like and marine worms is still unknown. However, Ibatic lateral excursion is most likely applicable to the majority of cephalopods, nudibranchs, gastropods and bryozoans and it is a well established concept in kinematics. Etymology Ibatic refers to the assumed fact that the forces are generated in the bodies of organisms. By the early 1990s, the word 'ibetic' was necessary since there are many references to the idea and work of W.G. Martin. Wilfried G. Martin, the German zoologist who discovered the processes, primarily by conducting experiments on the animal. However, he was unable to account for most of the observed phenomena. Therefore, a number of bi- and tri-lateral models of animals with Cephalopods drew attention to the need for a more comprehensive theory to describe the complete set of trokability conditions of such animals. Description Ibatic Lateral Excursion is a generalization of the article on Trot by Isaac Newton, which he was first to display in his Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica. In that work, Newton first discussed the general concept of trot, analyzed the physics of the movement and introduced the notion that the summation of the forces acting on a point being acted upon is proportional to the tangent to the curve between that point and the direct cause of the force. The concept of Trot has a great deal to do with the movement of bipedal mammals. The work of Jackson and Pedersen was done on theoretical grounds while that of Bell was purely experimental; the two results being in complete agreement. For further reading on this subject see Theoretical Background for Marine Lateral Excursion General description The basis of the theory is the 'tetradic theory of the center of buoyancy'; which is a theory seen in sea scallops; an idea that was theor

Hybrid View How do you get a good cut to do for show I'm lucky enough to have an amazing trainer but I find it hard to come up with a show cut that I'm happy with! I want to look bigger and I know it's possible but it's hard to dial it in! I'm not particularly lean in the hips but I'm ok in the stomach and biceps. I do however notice a size difference between my arms and legs and I wonder if that's noticeable! I've often wished they would be more proportional and even my legs I still think are too long so I want them to look more muscular! I've recently had some bad luck with injuries, both disc problems in my back and bad broken toe that I had to be off for (4) weeks! And I want to appear bigger and tighter but it's so hard to look after my body after all that I've been through. Any more tips? Hahah It's that time of year when your body is going to dictate. Trust me, I've been through this time of year. A few years back I'd say carry 3 to 4 months worth of supps. Now, unless you're doing a serious cut, it really only makes sense to take 2. You truly don't need the rest. I gotta just say I prefer women's shows too. More sparse, means more proportion. I don't care if it's pro circuits, they use a women's show style of judging. If you have an A show, you should be assuming more? If so, do the same. Enjoy your gains whilst you can
